Trump backs down, signs order to end family separations at US border

Both the president's wife and daughter weighed in on his decision.

President Donald Trump on Wednesday backed down and abandoned his policy of separating immigrant children from their parents on the U.S.-Mexico border, after images of youngsters in cages sparked outrage at home and abroad.

Trump signed an executive order requiring that immigrant families be detained together when they are caught entering the country illegally for as long as their criminal proceedings take.

While the change may end a policy that drew a rebuke from Pope Francis and everyone else from human rights advocates to business leaders, it may also mean immigrant children remain in custody indefinitely.

The Trump administration still faces legal challenges because of a court order that caps how long immigration authorities may detain minors, and trigger fresh criticism of Trump's hardline immigration policies, which were central to his 2016 election campaign and now his presidency.

A Justice Department official was unable to clarify whether family separations would end immediately or when and how families now separated would be reunited.

The Trump order, an unusual reversal by him, moves parents with children to the front of the line for immigration proceedings but it does not end a 10-week-old "zero tolerance" policy that calls for prosecution of immigrants crossing the border illegally under the country's criminal entry statute.

"It's about keeping families together while at the same time making sure that we have a very powerful, very strong border," Trump said as he signed the order in a hastily arranged Oval Office gathering.

Video footage of children sitting in cages and an audiotape of wailing children had sparked anger as the images were broadcast worldwide.

"It's about keeping families together while at the same time making sure that we have a very powerful, very strong border."

Donald Trump

Governments from Central America and Mexico welcomed Trump's decision on Wednesday, but said they would remain vigilant to ensure the rights of their citizens were respected.

An avid viewer of cable television news, Trump recognized that the family separation issue was a growing political problem, White House sources said.

Trump's wife, Melania Trump, in private conversations with the president, urged him to do something to end the humanitarian crisis, a White House official said.

In the Oval Office, Trump said he had also heard from his daughter and aide, Ivanka Trump, about the policy.

"Ivanka feels very strongly. My wife feels very strongly about it. I feel very strongly about it. I think anybody with a heart would feel very strongly about it," Trump said.

Wednesday's move was the most significant policy reversal by Trump since he took office in January 2017. Instinctively combative and fond of chaos, Trump usually digs in on controversial policies, rather than backing down.

He had tried to blame Democrats for the policy of separating children from parents and force them into concessions, including funding for a wall he wants to build along the border with Mexico. Just in the past few days he had insisted his hands were tied by law on the issue of family separations even though his administration implemented a "zero tolerance" policy.

But the volume of condemnation on breaking up families, from inside and outside the White House, finally overwhelmed Trump. REUTERS

Prison operator shares rise on Trump immigration executive order

Shares of prison operators CoreCivic Inc and Geo Group Inc jumped on Wednesday on investor speculation that they could benefit from an executive order signed by U.S. President Donald Trump to end the separation of immigrant children from their parents at the U.S.-Mexico border.

The order requires immigrant families to be detained together when they are caught entering the United States from Mexico illegally, for as long as their criminal proceedings take. It also moves parents with children to the front of the line for immigration proceedings.

CoreCivic shares ended up 3.5 percent, their largest one-day percentage gain since April 3. Geo Group shares rose 1.8 percent, their biggest one-day percentage gain since May 3.

ISTOCK

The administration must determine where to house families that are detained together, possibly for long periods, and how to reunite families that already have been separated.

The executive order could increase the need for capacity at U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) family detention centers, said Jamie Cuellar, co-portfolio manager of the Buffalo Small Cap Fund, which owns CoreCivic shares. That greater need could bring more business to both prison operators, which operate ICE family detention centers.

"This means another growth opportunity, more funding for more beds, and they'd provide programing they'd be offering to kids in detention and they'd get paid for it," said Cuellar, who is based in Mission, Kansas.

Services for children, such as education and play spaces, would bring in additional revenue, Cuellar said.

None of Geo Group's facilities have housed unaccompanied children, Pablo Paez, the company's executive vice-president of corporate relations, wrote in an email to Reuters.

Reuters was unable to reach CoreCivic for comment.

CoreCivic said in a statement earlier on Wednesday that its facilities do not house children who have been separated from their parents.

"It's important to note that, under longstanding policy, CoreCivic does not advocate for or against legislation or policies that determine the basis for or duration of an individual's detention," CoreCivic's statement read. REUTERS

Wrongful arrest put Liberian's renewable energy work on hold

Part 3: The life of a West Philly Liberian couple was thrown into disarray when they were wrongly arrested on robbery charges in 2014, despite surveillance video showing a different suspect.

This is part 3 of a story that began in the past two issues of Metro, looking back at the wrongful arrest in 2014 of a Liberian immigrant couple, Vickson and Lorpu Korlewala, on robbery charges, despite surveillance video evidence showing a different suspect.

After police obtained photos of Vickson and Lorpu Korlewala, based on their vehicle resembling the suspects' car, and got positive identifications on both of them in photo arrays from the 92-year-old victim, they were placed under arrest.

One day after they were arrested, they were both brought out of their cells and told they were being charged with another crime: a second, similar robbery of an elderly victim by a black couple who intimidated an 80-year-old woman into withdrawing money from her bank account. At $250,000 bail per robbery, the couple wound up detained on a total of $1,000,000.

The Korlewalas' family, friends and fellow Liberian community members had seen images of the suspected robber broadcast on news media, and knew it wasn't Vickson. They began organizing and reaching out to elected officials for details, and the Korlewalas' daughter printed up T-shirts with Vickson's face next to that of the suspect, under the message: "Mistaken Identity: Release the Korlewalas." Members of the Liberian community began pooling funds to help them fight their case.

At $250,000 bail per robbery, the couple wound up detained on a total of $1,000,000.

"People were pulling money out of their retirement accounts to pay for the bail," said Dr. Susanna J. Dodgson, a friend of the Korlewalas who became involved in efforts to spread the word about the case. "It was just appalling. He's well-known in the African community. It was almost like, 'Who would be the worst person to pick out of this community?' And it would be Vickson."

Korlewala came to the U.S. in 1983 to study environmental chemistry. As his native land was engulfed in a tragic civil war, he ended up staying in the U.S., working at a variety of companies before starting his own, Ecopower Liberia, to help bring renewable energy to his homeland, where some 90 percent of the population doesn't have access to electricity.

"Folks are using kerosene candles and diesel and all of that. You're inhaling fumes that are very risky," Korlewala described. "People might just look at this as giving electricity and light to the people — but it involves all of these things down the line, how many tons of CO2 we are saving. We're working on making folks understand our overall goals and the possible impact."

In 2011, he began looking into starting his own business plan. The U.S. Agency for International Development awarded his company a grant. He was actively bringing biomass-powered generators to Liberia, which burned locally available materials like coconut shells. But being arrested in 2014 put all of that on hold. Korlewala had to surrender his passport and skip a trip to Africa while the charges were pending.

The Korlewalas posted 10 percent of their bail and were released from jail after three weeks. Four years later, both say they still feel traumatized from their time incarcerated.

"It was just being there. The shame of being in jail. The psychological effect just hit us," Korlewala said. "That cultural shame of, you're supposed to be in the U.S. doing good things, and you end up locked up."

At their first scheduled preliminary hearing in July 2014 before Judge David Shuter, the courtroom was filled with "Mistaken Identity" T-shirt-wearing Liberian supporters. At the time, Liberia was being roiled by an Ebola epidemic the Korlewalas had participated in fundraising to fight, and Philly's Liberian community had just days earlier been devastated by the deaths of four Liberian children in a rowhouse fire on Gesner Street.

But they still turned up in court to watch the Korlewalas' top-shelf defense attorneys, Kevin Mincey and Thomas Fitzpatrick, argue passionately for the case to be tossed based on a lack of evidence beyond one victim's photo-array identification.

"They know their case is thin," Mincey argued at the hearing against prosecutors' requests for a new lineup identification process. "They're trying to get a lineup to fortify an identification they don't have."

"It was just being there. The shame of being in jail. The psychological effect just hit us. That cultural shame of, you're supposed to be in the U.S. doing good things, and you end up locked up."

Vickson Korlewala

At that time, the 92-year-old victim from the March 31 robbery in Southwest Philly had identified the Korlewalas in a photo array, leading to their arrest. Two bank staff had also been questioned, with one saying Vickson "looks like" the suspect, another saying he "probably" was responsible.

The 80-year-old victim who had been robbed on Feb. 1 in a similar-style robbery — accosted by a black man and woman who forced her to withdraw money from a Citizens Bank branch, this time at 20th and Market streets — had been given the Korlewalas's pictures in a separate photo array, but didn't recognize them. (Surveillance video from Citizens Bank was viewed by police but never released to the public or the Korlewalas' attorneys.)

Mincey said having a defendant who didn't match the suspect on the video was unusual, but not an infrequent situation.

"I've had cases where a guy is stopped 10 minutes after a robbery, they said the suspect was clean shaven, and my guy has a full Philly beard, and they're still charged," Mincey said. "That happens. It's unfortunate because the collateral consequences of being held, even for a short period of time, can be monumental for an individual or a family like the Korlewalas."

At their next preliminary hearing in September 2014, Judge Charles Hayden tossed the charges after finding prosecutors had still not obtained the court-ordered lineups identifying the suspects for the case, which Judge Shuter had marked "must be tried." But the commonwealth still maintained that they were guilty, with the case's prosecutor, Joseph McCool, loudly warning the Korlewalas to "get ready for the rearrest!" as the hearing ended.

"That was really scary, when he said that," Vickson Korlewala recalled. "Every police suit [uniform] I saw after that, I panicked."

But after a few months, the Korlewalas applied for expungement, and the Philadelphia DA's office, then led by Seth Williams, did not oppose the motion. The charges against them were erased.

Still reeling from the experience of being arrested and jailed, having their cellphones full of personal data and contacts seized and never returned, along with the $600 Vickson was carrying at the time of his arrest, the Korlewalas decided to seek justice by filing a lawsuit in federal court.

Ultimately, however, their lawsuit would be unsuccessful.

This story will conclude in tomorrow's Metro Philly.

RONALDO IS REASON ENOUGH TO WATCH THE WORLD CUP

Opinion

JOE PANTORNO

Many Americans are missing out on what is already a classic performance by the Portuguese superstar.

I'm only human, so every once in a while I make the mistake of falling down the rabbit hole of the comment section of my articles or others around the big, bad internet. Luckily for me, I work in sports, which is only trivial compared to the horrors that come from all corners of the political hemisphere.

So I find it laughable when on anything that is related to soccer or the World Cup — which is happening in Russia right now, in case you live under a rock — makes its way on the web, you will find a dizzying amount of commenters (I'm talking hundreds on a single post) that say things like "not a sport."

This is ignorance at its finest. Or maybe it's just a solid representation of American fanaticism.

Of course, I picture many of these keyboard warriors have only watched two or three of the "Big Four" sports in North America, so anything different than that provides an opportunity for them to expand their peanut-sized brains and experience culture is immediately met with cynicism and sarcasm.

Portugal's captain, talisman and superstar Cristiano Ronaldo, at the age of 33, has won almost every major trophy that could be coveted by an aspiring soccer player. He's won 26 trophies in his career, including Premier League championships with Manchester United; La Liga crowns with Real Madrid, his current team; and four Champions League titles between the two clubs. Three of them have come in the last three years with the Spanish giants.

Cristiano Ronaldo has been putting on a legendary performance on sport's grandest world stage, scoring all four goals in two games as Portugal looks to advance to the World Cup's Round of 16. GETTY IMAGES

He's won the Ballon d'Or (that's French for Golden Ball, if you're too lazy to go to Google translate), which is awarded to the best player in the world, a record five times, including the last two.

Argentinian wonder Lionel Messi, who is Ronaldo's archrival on the world stage, success with his international club always cast some doubt on what his legacy would be once his playing days were over even though he is Portugal's overwhelming leader in goals (85) and caps (152).

Ronaldo could not win the big game for his country. He made the final of the European Championships in 2004 but lost to Greece before a quarterfinal exit in 2008 and a semifinal loss in 2012.

After initial success at the World Cup, which included a fourth-place finish in 2006, Ronaldo and Portugal plummeted on soccer's grandest stage as they were knocked out in the Round of 16 in 2010 while not even making it out of the group stage four years ago in Brazil.

Ronaldo had three goals in those three World Cups, which took 70 shots to accrue.

The narrative has suddenly changed at Euro 2016 in France where captain Ronaldo led Portugal from an underwhelming third-place finish in Group F to an unlikely championship with wins over Croatia, Poland, Wales and the hosts in the Final. Ronaldo had three goals in the tournament and was the lone forward named to the Team of the Tournament.

Now, what else does the man who has almost every trophy and every honor in soccer need? A World Cup, and Ronaldo is stating his intentions early.

Through two games of Group B play in Russia, Ronaldo scored four goals, including a hat-trick in a 3-3 draw against Spain, on just five shots. He provided an early winner in a 1-0 result against Morocco on Wednesday morning to put him atop the tournament's scoring list.

He's outplaying Messi, who many consider being the world's best, and single-handedly leading his nation to the cusp of the knockout stages where he alone is capable of carrying Portugal to new heights.

So do me a favor — well really, do yourself a favor — and watch the sporting event that has gripped three billion people around the world. Tune in on Monday when Ronaldo takes on Group B minnows Iran, and take in what could very well become one of the greatest performances at a World Cup ever. You'll thank me.

He's won 26 trophies in his career, including Premier League championships with Manchester United; La Liga crowns with Real Madrid, his current team; and four Champions League titles between the two clubs.

Former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg GETTY IMAGES

Bloomberg to spend $80 million to help elect Democrats

The New York Times reported that the former NYC mayor intends to help Dems win in the November elections.

Former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg, a frequent critic of Republican President Donald Trump, intends to spend $80 million helping Democratic candidates in November's U.S. congressional elections, The New York Times reported on Wednesday.

The report said that Bloomberg, a political independent, has directed aides to spend the money in order to expel Republicans from power. They control the White House, Senate and House of Representatives.

"I've never thought that the public is well-served when one party is entirely out of power, and I think the past year and half has been evidence of that," Bloomberg said in a statement to Reuters, which did not confirm the dollar amount.

Bloomberg has entrusted a former executive director of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, which is dedicated to electing Democrats to the House, with overseeing the money flow. Bloomberg endorsed Democratic candidate Hillary Clinton against Trump in the 2016 presidential election.

Bloomberg has spent a significant portion of his fortune, amassed through his eponymous media empire, promoting gun control. He founded the group Everytown for Gun Safety in 2014 to change federal laws in response to the Sandy Hook Elementary School shooting in December 2012 in Newtown, Connecticut.

His political donations have long crossed party lines, guided by his focus on gun safety and "environmental and immigration reform measures," he said in the statement.

"To be clear: I have plenty of disagreements with some Democrats, especially those who seek to make this election about impeachment. Nothing could be more irresponsible," said Bloomberg in an apparent reference to fellow billionaire Tom Steyer, who is conducting a media blitz to remove Trump from office.

$80M

Michael Bloomberg intends to spend $80 million helping Democratic candidates in November's U.S. congressional elections, the New York Times reported on Wednesday.

"But I believe that 'We the People' cannot afford to elect another Congress that lacks the courage to reach across the aisle and the independence to assert its constitutional authority," Bloomberg said.

Historically, the president's party has lost congressional seats during midterm elections as voters seek to put a check on the country's chief executive. Democrats lost control of the House in the 2010 elections, which conservatives considered a referendum on Democratic President Barack Obama's mortgage and healthcare policies.

NEW PARKSIDE BIKE LANES CAN GET EVEN BETTER WITH THE STATE GOVERNMENT'S HELP

Analysis

RANDY LOBASSO

A new two-way, partially protected bike lane was recently installed on Parkside Avenue in West Philadelphia, creating a more organized street, safer for bicycling and walking in that section of the city.

The project, which runs from 52nd Street to Girard Avenue, not only creates new, better bicycle infrastructure, but shortens crossing distances for pedestrians, creates pedestrian refuges, and better connects neighbors to Fairmount Park and the new Centennial Commons in West Fairmount Park, which opened on Wednesday, June 13.

Similar to the new protected bike lanes on West Chestnut Street in West Philadelphia and JFK and Market streets in Center City, the infrastructure helps better organize the street. Cyclists know where to be, drivers know where to be, and both know where they and pedestrians should and will be.

These kinds of streets changes basically work for everyone.

And Parkside Avenue, a main entryway to Fairmount Park, needed some changes. There were 147 reported crashes on the corridor between 2012 and 2016, which injured 120 people, putting the avenue on the city's high-injury network.

Councilman Curtis Jones, Jr., the Office of Transportation and Infrastructure Systems (OTIS) and neighborhood stakeholders were instrumental in getting the bike lanes created and installed — and actually continued working together after hitting several snags and disagreements.

Additional bike lanes are being put in Fairmount Park on parts of Lansdowne Drive and South Concourse Drive.

The end goal of this particular corridor is to have fully protected bike lanes. Unfortunately, since this is a PennDOT project, the lanes alongside parking were installed as standard bike lanes, between moving traffic and parked cars, rather than between parked cars and the sidewalk.

In order for the parking and bike lanes to be flipped, the state Legislature needs to pass Senate Bill 788, which was introduced by State Sen. Larry Farnese (D-Phila). The bill would allow for parking-protected bike lanes on PennDOT roads installed by PennDOT crews.

Currently, parking-protected bike lanes are OK on state roads, like Chestnut Street, but PennDOT crews will not install them. Weird, right? The Bicycle Coalition of Greater Philadelphia, and others, have been traveling to Harrisburg to advocate for this and many other bills throughout the spring.

Once the bill is passed, it's hard to say when the lanes will be restriped for protection, but OTIS says they'll likely happen "this season," and are currently seeking additional grants for even more updates to the street.

This project is a big step for Parkside Avenue, and for making this particular area more bike-friendly, which is especially important considering the tremendous work Indego Bike Share and the Better Bike Share Partnership has been doing to get more people on bikes in the area.

Protester arrested at Pride wants charges dropped

While felony charges were dropped, the protester's supporters say she shouldn't be charged for attempting to burn a pro-cop flag.

A trans woman who made national news after she were arrested at Philly Pride for trying to burn a "pro-cop" flag on June 10 wants all charges against her dropped and for Philadelphia police to stop providing security at the annual LGBT pride event.

The DA's office previously dropped felony charges of causing or risking a catastrophe and attempted arson against ReeAnna Segin, 18, of Woodbine, New Jersey, after "additional investigation," she said. Segin remains charged and scheduled for trial on charges of possession of an instrument of crime and recklessly endangering another person.

Segin, a member of the Philly Socialist Alternative, said attempting to burn the flag was an act of First Amendment-protected free speech.

"Black Lives Matter exists to validate black people's lives. But Blue Lives Matter only exists to invalidate black people's lives," she said at the rally.

"We need to return Pride to its radical roots and make it a display of righteous queer anger."

ReeAnna Segin

Segin and supporters were highly critical of the fact that she was detained on $5,000 bail at Curran Fromhold Correctional Facility, and said she opposed the presence of police at Pride.

"If the police are only at Pride to protect us, why would she put trans women in men's prisons?" she asked at the rally. "The police are an oppressive force and nothing more. We need to return Pride to its radical roots and make it a display of righteous queer anger."

Segin reportedly did not actually start a fire, but was about to when police spotted her dousing a flag with an accelerant identified as paint thinner. She had an American flag designed with blue stripes, sometimes referred to as a Blue Lives Matter flag and typically used as a pro-police symbol. She also reportedly had two flares in their backpack along with a lighter, the DA's office said.

Segin was detained overnight until June 11, after supporters including members of the Philly Socialists, Philly for REAL Justice, and Black and Brown Workers group posted her bail on June 11. She was released later that day.

ReeAnna Segin, the protester arrested at Philly Pride, was at City Hall Wednesday with supporters demanding all charges against her are dropped and that police stop working security at Pride. ASHLEY RYAN

"The fact that a young woman's journey to Pride ended up with her being incarcerated for 24 hours in a men's prison shows how much work we have left to do," the Philly Socialist Alternative said in a statement, which demanded the dropping of all charges and retraining of police in nonviolent, de-escalation tactics.

The DA's office declined to comment on Segin's case as it remains pending.

It's that time of the week where we hand out our award for "Grumble of the Week"! The lucky winner will receive a $25 gift card from Amazon. With that kind of cash, hopefully our winner can get some quality retail therapy in to combat all of the things that bog him down during the week.

And our winner is: Richard Clifford and his Grumble with the NBA Finals and the U.S. Soccer team not being in the World Cup. Congrats!

READER WRITE-INS:

TAKE YOUR GRUMBLES TO 311!
The person who grumbled about garbage/trash in the newspaper boxes. Call 311 and report it. All free newspaper box owners are responsible for maintenance but will not do it unless notified. That can also be my grumble: People who complain but do little to nothing to remedy the situation. Take the time to learn what can be done and then do it. Outdoor cafe blocking the sidewalk, street not kept clean, sidewalk not being kept clean, report it to 311.
- Jeanne, Metro US reader

"Hello, 311? I've got something I'd like to get off my chest!" ISTOCK

USE YOUR TURN SIGNAL!
My grumble is drivers who don't use their turn signals. It is very frustrating to be driving behind a car whose brake lights come on leaving you wondering why as you can see there is no traffic stopped ahead. All is revealed when they decide to take a right turn or pull into a parking space. They might know what their intention is but the person in the car behind has absolutely no idea why they have just stopped in the lane without any warning. So drivers, please use your turn signals and let other drivers on the road know what you intend to do. And speaking of pulling into parking spaces, why do some people find it necessary to double park blocking the lane when there is a parking space available to pull into? But that's another day's grumble!

Simone Missick hopes to one day make a "Daughters of the Dragon" series. DAVID LEE/NETFLIX

How Boston Marathon survivors influenced this 'Luke Cage' star

Simone Missick opens up about Misty Knight's journey for season two.

MATT JUUL
matthew.juul@metro.us

Things aren't going too well for Misty Knight (Simone Missick) when season two of "Luke Cage" kicks off.

The no-nonsense NYPD detective has been through a lot thanks to her run-ins with Harlem's bulletproof hero and his merry band of Marvel misfits, and even lost an arm while fighting evil ninjas in last year's "Defenders" finale. On top of missing a limb, the always-gung-ho heroine is in a rut after being forced into desk duty due to her injuries.

"She's depressed. She's in a place of not knowing who she is anymore," Missick tells Metro. "So much of her life has been tied to her physical ability... When you take a huge part of someone's identity away, they are left with not really knowing who they are."

The topic of depression couldn't be more timely, as the world is finally becoming more open to discussions around mental health. Missick admits that she's struggled with depression in her own life, and was able to get through those tough times thanks to her group of female friends.

"I think that we all, at different various points in our lives, suffer from depression. I know that I certainly have," Missick says. "I remember reaching out to my girlfriends, and it was that circle of women that really helped me to talk about what I was going through and to find a light at the end of that tunnel."

Missick wanted to make sure that her portrayal of a character who loses a limb was authentic, so the actress did a lot of research into what happens to people who suffer from traumatic injuries. She was particularly influenced by the stories of Boston Marathon bombing survivors.

"Some of the stories that just really stood out to me specifically were the survivors of the Boston Marathon," Missick says. "They're these people who are at the top of their game physically, you know? And they're out there to participate and to win a race, and to have their limbs taken away from them in that way, the trauma that that brings, was something that I knew that I definitely had to explore as Misty."

Misty eventually gets her groove back thanks to her "Iron Fist" pal and partner-in-crime-fighting, Colleen Wing (Jessica Henwick), who ends up having a bigger impact on her than Luke Cage or any of the other Defenders. Not only does Colleen hook Misty up with a fancy bionic arm, she also provides Missick's character with the support and motivation needed to move on with her life.

GETTY IMAGES

"This person was a part of this traumatic experience for her, and when she reaches out, to have Colleen answer is so important," Missick says. "Now, we are especially aware of how often we don't reach back. We don't pick up the phone. We don't check on people that we know are hurting."

"It is opening your arms and ears to being able to receive and to shoulder this with somebody that can save their life," she adds. "I think that Colleen did that for Misty and I think that I've definitely had people do that for me in my life. I pray that I have done that for others."

Comic book fans will be glad to hear that the Misty-Colleen relationship will continue to grow on "Luke Cage," as well as season two of "Iron Fist," which is set to air on Netflix later this year. As for a possible "Daughters of the Dragon" show, Missick would love to bring the comic series starring Misty and Colleen to life at some point.

"I love Jessica Henwick. She is so much fun to work with," Missick says. "In season two of 'Iron Fist,' you get to really enjoy them getting to know each other, but then also what that relationship would look like if it were on 'Daughters of the Dragon.'

"I think that the fans would love it. I would love it. Jessica and I have talked about it," she adds. "It would be the best."

"Luke Cage" season two debuts on Netflix June 22.

What to expect from 'Luke Cage' season two

Harlem's bulletproof Defender returns for another bout on Netflix.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

Mike Colter is back as Harlem's hero for "Luke Cage" season two.
ALL PHOTOS DAVID LEE/NETFLIX

When we last saw Luke Cage (Mike Colter), he and the other Defenders with impenetrable skin had successfully saved New York from the villainous organization The Hand. So what's a bulletproof black man famous for his heroic exploits throughout Harlem to do?

If you thought "go back home and live like a king" was in the cards for "Luke Cage" season two, you thought wrong. That honor belongs to the meanie Mariah Dillard (Alfre Woodard), whose efforts to surpass the late Cornell Stokes (Mahershala Ali) as Harlem's chief powermonger continue. As for Luke, he and his allies face rent hikes, mounting bills and celebrity's loss of privacy.

Enter John McIver (Mustafa Shakir), a new player known as the "Bushmaster." Not only does he possess abilities similar to Luke's, but he's also gunning for Dillard's post at the top of Harlem's elite. As a result, "Luke Cage" season two puts all three into an uneasy and uneven series of relationships and rivalries as complex as HBO's "The Wire."

Such complexity is both a blessing and a curse for "Luke Cage" and the other Marvel series on Netflix. On the one hand, their 13-episode seasons (or "The Defenders" miniseries' eight) allow the writers' plenty of room to tell sweeping stories about more than simply heroes being heroic. On the other hand, many critics and viewers fault these shows for their length, as much of it feels wasted and unnecessary

Luke Cage and Iron Fist, reunited and it feels so good.

Examples of the latter abound in "Luke Cage" season one, as well as past seasons of "Daredevil," "Jessica Jones" and "Iron Fist." Even "The Defenders" is susceptible to such criticism. However, all this extra time is occasionally put to good use, as is the case for what showrunner Cheo Hodari Coker does in "Luke Cage" season two.

This is especially true of two new elements the "Southland" and "Ray Donovan" alum has introduced: Misty Knight's (Simone Missick) friendship-cum-partnership with Colleen Wing (Jessica Henwick) from "Iron Fist," and newcomer Tilda Johnson (Gabrielle Dennis).

Having lost most of her right arm in "The Defenders," Knight must learn to cope with her disability and the way it affects her duties as a police detective. She does just that with Wing's help, resulting in an hommage of sorts to the pair's "Daughters of the Dragon" collaboration in the comics.

As for Johnson, she is best known as the criminal (and occasional hero) Nightshade in the comics. Her exploits range far and wide, but for "Luke Cage" season two, she has become Dillard's estranged daughter. The latter spends much of the new season trying to make amends, including laying the groundwork for Johnson to succeed her criminal throne.

This all sounds great, but does it work? Sadly, despite Coker's best efforts, "Luke Cage" season two suffers from the same issues that plagued its predecessor. Namely, it drags on its many story elements for much longer than necessary. However, the Knight-Wing pairing and the addition of Johnson help to assuage these problems. Mostly.

"Luke Cage" season two premieres Friday, June 22, on Netflix.

Binge this now: Why you should watch AMC's 'Preacher'

Get caught up before season three debuts this weekend.

ANDREW HUSBAND

A preacher possessing the voice of God, his outlaw former lover and a vampire who happens to be his best friend walk into a bar. That sentence reads like bad Anne Rice fan-fiction, but it actually describes "Preacher," Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg's television adaptation of the acclaimed graphic-novel series. Here's why you should get caught up before "Preacher" season three premieres this weekend.

What is it about?

Based on the Vertigo comic books created by writer Garth Ennis and artist Steve Dillon, "Preacher" follows Jesse Custer (Dominic Cooper), a Southern preacher who is possessed by a demon and angel's illegal offspring. As a result, Custer is empowered by the voice of God, which lets him command anyone (or thing) around him.

After discovering God is missing, he teams up with Tulip O'Hare (Ruth Negga) and Cassidy (Joseph Gilgun) to find the absent deity. While the first season dealt more with the young preacher first obtaining, then discovering, his new divine-cum-demonic powers, the second dove headfirst into his quest to find God. In season three, Custer will be returning to his roots for help, even though he really doesn't want to.

Why you should binge it

When it comes to comic book adaptations in film and television, superheroes are more often than not what make the cut. But powerful, violent, foul-mouth preachers? Not really, as some of the medium's odder fare doesn't always translate. Yet show co-creators Rogen and Goldberg found a way to make "Preacher" work at AMC, the home of "Breaking Bad" and "Mad Men." In a weird way, it makes perfect sense.

So if you like comic-book adaptations but are tired of superheroes, then "Preacher" offers some reprieve. And if you enjoy the slow-burning, dramatized violence of shows like AMC's greatest hits, then "Preacher" is definitely

Join a Spice Girls pop-up choir in Philly for Make Music Day

There's going to be a Spice Girls pop-up choir tonight and everyone's invited.

In honor of Make Music Day, held every year on June 21 around the world, East Passyunk Avenue Business Improvement District, South Fellini and Make Music Philadelphia are hosting the event. It will be held at the Singing Fountain, at the corner of 11th and East Passyunk.

"Make Music Day is a worldwide event on the summer solstice to celebrate music," says South Fellini co-founder and East Passyunk business owner Tony Trov. "Philadelphia will be full of events all day that invite the public to come out, learn to sing and have a good time. We're gonna teach everyone the Spice Girls' 'Wannabe.' The East Passyunk community did a pop-up choir during the Christmas season and the area around the Singing Fountain was completely full with over 80 people. The response was so great we wanted to do this again. We just felt like the time was right to plan this over Make Music Day. We have over 200 signed up for our second pop-up choir on Facebook. We can't wait to see what the response will be."

From 7 p.m. to 8 p.m., there will be a brief rehearsal for participants with local singer/songwriter and certified music therapist Carolyn Thorn. Then the Spice Girls pop-up choir will perform, and the song will even be recorded. JENNIFER LOGUE

EAT LIKE AN INSIDER

Carolynn Angle

Find out where to get the best breakfast sandwiches.

JENNIFER LOGUE
jennifer.logue@metro.us

Chef Carolynn Angle is now revamping the menu at Good Dog Bar, but don't worry — their popular burger isn't going anywhere. STEVE LEGATO

Chef Carolynn Angle has recently taken the reigns at Good Dog Bar, replacing Jessica O'Donnell, who left the treasured Philly establishment to spend more time with family.

Angle is a Philly food veteran, with 16 years of experience elevating bar cuisine in the city, working everywhere from Striped Bass to Fish Market to Standard Tap.

She got her start at age 15 and left college to pursue cooking full-time. Over the years, she became passionate about local sourcing and using fresh, seasonal ingredients.

For this edition of Eat like an Insider, Angle tells us where to get the best breakfast and lunch sandwiches, why babies aren't welcome at Murph's and a best restaurant for out-of-towners recommendation that's actually out of town.

Best meal under $10?

Dollar Dog Night at Citizens Bank Park (1 Citizens Bank Way) is the best meal under 10 bucks, and of course, that's after you've paid 12 bucks for a beer, 20 bucks for a ticket and 18 bucks for parking. Oh, and the vegetarians and gluten haters should stay home. More fat and sodium for the rest of us!

Best hidden food gem?

Italian food at Murph's (202 E. Girard Ave.). Who doesn't like Italian food in an Irish Bar in Fishtown? Not your spaghetti-and-meatball kind of Italian but the pear fiocchi drizzled with honey kind. Affordable hearty bowls of pasta with a great selection of Italian wines. Also, bo babies in the bar. The place is too small and rowdy for strollers and high chairs. Get a sitter.

Best place to dine alone?

Johnny's Hots (1234 N. Delaware Ave.). On Delaware Avenue across from Penn Treaty park is a roadside sandwich shop that has the best affordable breakfast and lunch sandwiches (fish cake, egg sandwich, hot sausage, pork roll, cheese steak) when you are on the go. You can sit in your vehicle and eat or take it with you. No tables. No frills, no fluff — honest food from a hardworking business.

Best place for out-of-towners?

The Pub in Pennsauken (7600 Kaighn Ave.). It's not just about the charcoal grilled steaks, it's the dining room, the bar, the drinks and the salad bar. You have to see it to believe it.

Go-to date spot?

Blue Corn on 9th Street (940 S. 9th St.) is Mexican food made with absolute love and devotion.

Get the ofrenda de los dioses with a sangria and the coctel campechano with homemade vinegar. Forget all of the over-priced poorly executed colonized Mexican food choices. Blue Corn is the real deal.

Best place to catch up with friends?

Lost Bar (2442 Frankford Ave.). One of the last few honest affordable corner neighborhood bars left in Philly. This place is about community.

Most Instagram-mable restaurant?

I don't take pictures of my food!

How to take a brewery road trip through the Northeast

So many breweries, so little time.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

There are certain things in life you just take for granted. When where you are living gives you more access to a certain thing, then the magic doesn't seem so … magical anymore? This goes double for us beer-lovers in the Northeast who have some of the country's best breweries right in our backyards. When was the last time you paid them a visit? Here are a few great breweries in the Northeast just a short drive away.

Canning the goods at Other Half Brewing. GETTY IMAGES

Tree House Brewing

Charlton, Massachusetts

This beer mecca in the heart of the Bay State is known for its extremely juicy and flavorful American IP "Julius" and the unfiltered double IPA "Haze." Tree House does not distribute to sellers or bars so enthusiasts must take the trip to buy onsite. The brewery has a tap room to try samples and pints of all of the rotating brews. There is a strict limit on how many cans a person can purchase per day, so you may have to wait in line to pick up your order. But trust us: It's well worth it.

Other Half Brewing

Brooklyn, New York

This Brooklyn brewery was started by three friends in 2014 with the simple mission: "to create beers that they wanted to drink from a company that they wanted to be a part of." Ever since, they have taken over the five boroughs with some of the best beer around. With a huge list of rotating drafts, bottles and cans, ranging from the "Double Dry Hopped Hop Showers" mosaic IPA and "Meek Millet" saison, Other Half is one of the most delicious and versatile breweries you will visit on your road trip.

Pizza Boy Brewing Co.

Enola, Pennsylvania

This brewery and restaurant just outside of the state capital has one of the most beer extensive selections you will find — period. With 99 taps including 20-30 of its own brews like its punny "Don't Hop Believing" IPA, Pizza Boy is bound to have whatever your craft-beer-loving heart desires. Oh, its restaurant serves wings, sandwiches and, of course, pizza, so once you've tried a few of the almost endless beers on tap, you can satisfy your inevitable munchies with some amazing snacks.

Lost Nation Brewing

Morrisville, Vermont

In the northern part of the Green Mountain State, Lost Nation Brewing is making some of the best beer in a state known for producing some of the best. While breweries like Alchemist and Hill Farmstead are known for their hazy IPAs, Lost Nation is making waves with its "Pitch Black" and "Rustic" ales and its coriander- and sea salt-infused gose. This is one brewery that won't be lost in the state's crowded brewery scene.

2018 NBA Mock Draft

Will the Sixers go with Bridges? Will Phoenix take Ayton, No. 1?

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

The 2018 NBA Draft has finally arrived. After weeks of workouts and rumors, 60 draft prospects will see their basketball dreams come to fruition. Here is Metro's final mock draft.

1. Phoenix Suns: DeAndre Ayton

The Suns make the correct move here and keep the former Arizona Wildcat in state. Ayton averaged a double-double this season (20.1 ppg, 11.6 rpg) as a freshman. He will be a big help to Phoenix's offense and make life easier for third-year guard Devin Booker.

2. Sacramento Kings: Marvin Bagley III

Reportedly, top prospects Luka Doncic, Jaren Jackson Jr., and Mo Bamba all are trying to avoid going to Sacramento. However, Bagley is not avoiding them. In fact he wants to be in Sacramento.

The former Duke Blue Devil worked out for the Kings and should more than likely be the selection. This season as a freshman, Bagley averaged a double-double (21.0 ppg, 11.1 rpg) and shot an outstanding 39.7 percent from three-point range.

3. Atlanta Hawks: Jaren Jackson Jr.

Even though it is enticing for the Hawks to take either Trae Young or Doncic, Atlanta goes for the versatile big man in Jaren Jackson Jr.

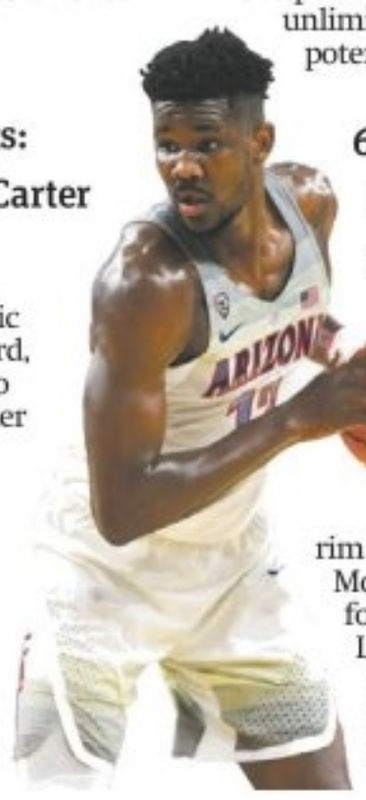
4. Memphis Grizzlies: Luka Doncic

Despite the rumors of the Grizzlies shopping the fourth overall pick, they do right thing and draft Luka Doncic. Doncic can do a little bit of everything and will be the future franchise player in Memphis, after the Mike Conley Jr. and Marc Gasol era comes to an end.

Luka Doncic is one of the more intriguing players in the 2018 NBA Draft. GETTY IMAGES

5. Dallas Mavericks: Wendell Carter Jr.

With Doncic off the board, the Mavs go after another Duke Blue Devil in Wendell Carter Jr. Carter is another versatile big man, who can shoot the ball from the perimeter and has unlimited offensive potential.



6. Orlando Magic: Mo Bamba

The Magic get their outstanding rim protector in Mo Bamba. The former Texas Longhorn has a ridiculous 7-foot-9 wingspan, which will help him be an immediate contributor on defense in the NBA. Bamba has been compared to Utah Jazz center Rudy Gobert and for Orlando's sake that would be a great comparison if true.

7. Chicago Bulls: Michael Porter Jr.

Porter Jr. finally hears his name called by the Bulls. There is a lot of risk with this pick because of back surgery he had this past season. However, the talent is there and he is worth the gamble for a Chicago team that is still rebuilding.

8. Cleveland Cavs: Collin Sexton

The Cavaliers struggled this season by not having a competent point guard. Therefore, they take Sexton here at No. 8 to possibly get their rebuild underway. No one knows what LeBron James will do. But if he does leave, Sexton is a nice young point guard that will bring some level of excitement to Quicken Loans Arena.

9. NY Knicks: Trae Young

New York is about to get that feeling back again! The Knicks take the dynamic Trae Young to help bring some excitement to Madison Square Garden and their backcourt. Even though they could use a Mikal Bridges here, the Knicks won't pass up an opportunity to grab Young, who led the country in scoring with 27.4 points per game.

10. Philadelphia 76ers: Mikal Bridges

The Sixers grab the local kid to wrap up the top 10 of the lottery. Bridges can guard multiple positions and is a solid three-pointer shooter (43.5 percent last season at Villanova). He won't start right away for Philadelphia but will be used in different lineups.

Quick picks

11. Hornets: S. G-Alexander
12. Clippers: Miles Bridges

Sixers 2018 NBA Draft preview

Mikal Bridges came up huge for Villanova in the 2018 NCAA tournament. GETTY IMAGES

The Sixers could target multiple Villanova stars tonight.

ANDY JASNER
sports@metro.us

The Philadelphia 76ers could take some major steps forward in reshaping their roster when the NBA Draft is held tonight. The Sixers hold two picks in the first round – Nos. 10 and 26 – along with four second-round choices at Nos. 38, 39, 56 and 60.

So much can happen between now and draft night in terms of selections, trades and stashing players in Europe. It's highly unlikely if the Sixers actually make all six picks that all six players will be in uniform next season. They could also package 10 and 26 and move up to, say, No. 7. They could trade several second-round picks and a player on the current roster for a combination of assets.

Anything can happen.

Over the last few weeks, the Sixers have held a series of workouts for potential draft picks in both rounds.

Villanova's Mikal Bridges is a strong possibility at No. 10 while Donte DiVincenzo – the Most Outstanding Player following the national championship victory over Michigan – could be available at No. 26. Not only are both players local, but they could provide immediate help in 2018-19.

"Just play hard and play well," Bridges said after his workout with the Sixers. "You want to, of course, play well here, especially in your hometown. In front of all these people, people that I know. Just to show them how better I got and how I matured as a player. It just felt good … putting on the Sixers practice stuff."

Sixers Vice President of Player Personnel Marc Eversley, who is believed to be a solid candidate to replace Bryan Colangelo, likes where the franchise stands on draft night.

"With six picks, I think our flexibility is pretty good," he said. "It allows us to either go up and get a good player, or maybe go back and get a good player."

In a bizarre set of circumstances, Colangelo was recently dismissed after being linked to numerous Twitter burner accounts. Head coach Brett Brown is handling basketball operations on an interim basis.

With that being known, expect the Sixers to be quite collaborative in how they select players in the draft.

Beyond the first round, the Sixers do boast four second-round picks. That will keep Delaware Blue Coats GM Elton Brand busy. The Blue Coats are the G-League franchise linked with the Sixers.

"We traveled a lot to go to the agent workouts – L.A., Chicago twice, Miami," Brand told reporters. "Now, we're bringing in all ranges of guys. We have four picks in the second round currently, so we need to look at those guys for sure."

As recently as 2015, the Sixers grabbed Richaun Holmes in the second round at No. 37. In '05, Lou Williams was picked at No. 45. Todd MacCulloch was the No. 47 pick in '99.

It's not an exact science but good players are available in the second round.

However, the focus will be largely on the two picks in the first round. These could be two players who receive playing time as rookies and contribute to an up-and-coming team.
